ONE A.M.

One A.M. is one of Charlie Chaplin's most unusual—and funniest—early films. Instead of portraying his famous "tramp" character, Chaplin plays a wealthy gentleman who arrives home in the wee hours worse for the wear after a night on the town. After breaking into his house, he battles a jungle of malevolent props downstairs before reaching his bedroom and facing his worse enemy, a collapsible wall bed.

This film was a significant departure for Chaplin. Normally his tramp character would fight cops and robbers alike while rescuing waifs, strays, and sweet young girls. One A.M., instead, is a brilliant one-man mime show which Chaplin unfortunately never chose to repeat in his career. Originally released silent, the new music score is by Carl Davis. ■

From the late 1800's through the early 20th Century, vaudeville was the common people's theatrical experience. Across America and around the world, this wildly popular genre featured variety acts of countless descriptions and later included film programs. Alex Film Society's annual recreation of the nostalgic program is the only vaudeville show produced regularly in Los Angeles.

Built in 1925, the lovingly restored Alex Theatre was reopened by the City of Glendale in 1994. It stands today as one of the most important surviving examples of grand Vaudeville and movie palaces of the early 20th century and one of the very few extant theatres with an open forecourt.

The live portion of today's program was produced by Chuck Burnes, Periwinkle Productions, Anaheim, CA. ■

PARDON MY BERTH MARKS

In the early 1940s, famed silent comedian Buster Keaton made a series of sound comedy shorts for Columbia with Jules White, who is best known for producing/ directing shorts for the Three Stooges.

Pardon My Berth Marks is by far the most successful of the Keaton/White films. Buster plays a newsroom office boy who longs to be a reporter. He gets his chance when he accidentally receives a phone call with a tip that a mobster's wife is fleeing to Reno for a divorce. Buster boards a train to follow the action, and chaos ensues.

During the film Buster is allowed several extended segments which showcase his comedic style, most notably when he imitates a squawking parrot to escape an irate husband.

Producer/Director: Jules White Story/Screenplay: Clyde Bruckman Photography: Benjamin Kline Distributor: Columbia Released: 1940 Running Time: 18 mins.
